Local Matters.

The Gibbs Children's Festival.

Owing to the other attractions which the city has arranged for Independence Day proper, Major and Mrs. Theo. K. Gibbs have decided to have their annual Fourth of July Children's Entertainment on Saturday, the 2d, this year. Not that the entertainment they give would be a prominent feature of the day, however grand might be the public celebration, for it would, but their entertainment is particularly for the children and consequently is more appropriate and far better enjoyed by itself.

This generous couple have arranged for much the same entertainment as they gave last year, and to those who witnessed last year's gathering this explanation would be all sufficient; but for the benefit of those who did not, we would say it was probably the finest thing of the kind ever witnessed in New England. A huge tent is erected on a vacant lot near Gibbs avenue to which all the children in the city, of whatever station, nationality or creed, are invited, and at the hour set last year there were between 2,500 and 3,000 of these little ones marched under the immense spread of canvas and each given a seat without the slightest disturbance or confusion of any kind. Brief exercises of an appropriate character follow; each child is provided with a plate of ice cream and cake and a box of candy, and when these are disposed of, with a small American flag on a stick.

Only the very finest and highest priced candies and cereals are served, the generous donors refusing to accept anything that they would not be willing their own children should eat. More than a half ton of candy alone was required to go round at last year's gathering.

Mrs. Lincoln, widow of Rev. Heman Lincoln, D. D., of Newton, Mass., died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Alfred G. Langley, in this city, Tuesday, after a long and painful illness. The deceased was a lady of culture and before her marriage won quite a reputation as a writer, under the name of Kate Campbell. She was a native of Philadelphia and her maiden name was Jane Elizabeth Lacombe.

Mr. Stephen L. Goddard and Miss Josephine, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. T. Melville, were united in marriage Tuesday at Trinity parsonage. Rev. G. J. Magill officiated and Mr. Louis P. Mumford performed the duties of best man, while Miss Clara Melville, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. Mr. and Mrs. Goddard took the 2:55 train for a brief wedding tour.

The hearing in the Newport election case was brought to a close Monday, Mr. Frank F. Nolan making the argument for the defendants and Mr. Bosworth for the memorialists, and the matter is now in the hands of the General Assembly for a verdict.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

A Big Celebration Promised for Newport.

The members of the committee on Fourth of July celebration have been exceedingly active since their appointment, and as a result there is every evidence that Newport is to have a "Big Fourth" this year. Realizing that to attain this desired result more money than the City Council appropriated would be necessary, the committee immediately went to work to raise by private subscription an additional amount, and getting Mr. E. S. Vars to aid in the matter, they have certainly been very successful.

The committee has not constantly, each member showing great interest in the work, and a programme which will include the following attractions has already been made up: In the morning, starting at 10 o'clock, will be a street parade, the line including the light battery and troops from Fort Adams, the naval apprentices and marines from the Training Station, the Newport Artillery Company, the Newport Light Infantry, the Newport Fire Department, men and apparatus, and the various civic societies of the city. The line will form on Washington square and march along Thames, Dearborn, Spring, Lowery, Bellevue avenue, Kay, Ayrault, Broadway to Bliss road and back, Marlboro, Fawcett, Walnut, Washington, Bridge, Thames, Touro and Bellevue avenue to Touro Park, where it is expected to arrive about 12:30. At the Park an oration will be delivered by Mr. J. Stacy Brown, son of Hon. Lewis Brown, of this city, and the leading orator of his class at Harvard, and the Declaration of Independence will be read by one of the pupils of Rogers High School, these exercises to be interspersed with patriotic music.

In the afternoon there will be a balloon ascension and parachute at the Middleboro avenue lot, and a base ball match, bicycle race and athletic sports—both by professionals and amateurs—at Morton Park.

Base Ball.

An interesting game of base ball between the Rogers High School nine and the Atlantic, was witnessed by a good sized audience at Morton Park Saturday, and it was won by the R. H. S. in a score of 6 to 2. The High School boys are playing an excellent game this season, and bid fair to be the champions before the end of the summer.

Today's game at Morton Park will be between the Pacifics of this city and the Banner Boys, of Providence, and a well contested match is expected.

The annual memorial services to the late Rev. Charles T. Brooks were held at Channing church Sunday and were largely attended. The church was tastefully decorated with wild flowers, and Rev. H. G. Spaulding, of Boston, preached an eloquent sermon appropriate to the occasion. In the afternoon the children of the Sunday-school went to the cemetery as usual and decorated the grave of Mr. Brooks with a profusion of flowers.

Hazard Memorial School Graduation.

The first year's work of the Hazard Memorial School of St. Joseph's Parish was brought to a close this week and the interesting and highly creditable anniversary exercises, held at the school hall Thursday afternoon, gave conclusive evidence that the work had been successful and must have been most gratifying to Rev. Father Coyle and the sisters, who have had charge of the instruction, as well as to Mr. Geo. Babcock Hazard, through whose munificence the elegant school house was built.

The exercises drew a large and representative audience, not only of the pupils' parents and members of the parish generally, but of Protestant citizens who are interested in educational matters, and among those occupying seats on the stage were noticed ex-Mayor Thomas Coggeshall, Captain C. C. Churchill, U. S. A., and Messrs. T. E. Blakely, John Gilpin, M. F. Shea, Richard Bliss, Daniel Galvin, F. E. Nolan and George Babcock Hazard, the generous founder of the school.

Rev. Father Coyle opened the exercises with a brief but feeling address upon the excellent work accomplished during the year, and the bright prospects of future improvement, and made eloquent reference to Mr. Hazard whose thoughtful generosity had made the great triumph of the day possible, after which the diplomas and prizes were awarded according to merit.

After the awards had been made Mr. Rev. Bishop Harkins addressed the school in much the same terms as had the pastor, expressing great pride and gratification at the excellent showing which had been made, and impressing upon the children the gratitude which they should feel toward Mr. Hazard who had given them such exceptional opportunities for an education.

Mr. Hazard then gave the boys and girls a characteristic talk, explaining the reasons and purposes for which he had given the school and expressing pride and satisfaction at the results for the first year. He urged upon the children the importance of their making good use of their opportunities; hoped that they would enjoy the vacation which they had earned and that they would return in September with a determination to win fresh laurels, and closed with the promise that if a larger school was needed it should be provided.

Sad Death of E. W. Gould.

A sad accident occurred on the grounds of the Staten Island Athletic Club Saturday afternoon, by which Mr. Edward W. Gould, a well known son of Newport, lost his life. The Club was giving an amateur Wild West performance in which Mr. Gould and his two sons, Mr. David J. Gould and Mr. E. W. Gould, Jr., were participants.

The former, acting the part of the "old settler," occupied a place on the "Deadwood Coach" beside the driver, while his sons were among the attacking Indians, and Mrs. Gould, the wife and mother, was an interested spectator on the grand stand. During the excitement of the attack the horses attached to the coach took fright and turning short upset the coach. Mr. Gould was instantly killed, his neck being broken, while the other occupants escaped serious injury. The accident caused great excitement and cast a shadow over all that will not soon be removed.

Mr. Gould carried on a large brokerage business in New York, in which his two sons were associated with him, and held a seat in the New York Stock Exchange. He was a son of the late David J. Gould and was born in this city about fifty years ago. His remains were brought here for burial in the family lot in the Island Cemetery, and the funeral was solemnized from the residence of Mr. Wm. C. Cozzano, on Howard avenue, Tuesday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Jones, of Staten Island, officiated and the services were attended by a large number of relatives and friends.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Francis B. Peckham, Robert S. Barker, Anthony S. Sherman, Howard Smith, Godfrey Moffitt, Edward Newton, Lewis Brown and William C. Stevens.

Gleason, of Boston, Grand Lecturer. The Commandery, under the charge of E. M. Sir Wm. W. Sampson, Commander, turned out in full ranks to escort the visitors to the hall. The Newport Band furnished music. After the secret work was performed a sumptuous banquet was served. Pleasing addresses were afterwards made by the visiting brothers and others. CLEANINGS FROM HISTORY.

Presented by JAMES C. SWAN.

Nero, VI Emperor of Rome A. D. 55.

Nero, though but seventeen years of age, began his reign, with the general joy and satisfaction of the city, which conceived great hopes from his outward endeavors to serve the public. For first, he promised to govern according to the wise rules and instructions of Augustus, and began both in words and actions to show himself just, liberal and merciful; conferring favors, dividing large sums of money, among the people and Praetorian soldiers, and moderating the impositions and tributes of the provinces; and to the senators who were poor, he assigned pensions, using all men with such courtesy and humanity, as there seemed no reason to fear those miseries that afterwards followed. He likewise showed such great clemency and pity in the execution of justice and punishment, that when a warrant was brought to him to sign for a condemned person with great concern he said, "Would to Heaven that I knew not how to write!" Which words are much extolled by Seneca. The senate giving him thanks for the justice and regularity of his administration, he replied with singular modesty, "Pray defer your thanks till I deserve them." He entertained, in like manner, all men, with exceeding civility and friendship, and in his sports and exercises he permitted any to be present; so that it seemed as if Heaven had sent the Romans such a Prince as they desired; and his five years' government was so excellent, in general, that the famous Emperor Trajan afterwards said, "That for that space all governments came short of his. But a great part of this is to be attributed to the wise conduct of his son and Seneca, which two were this young Emperor's guides and governors, in equal authority, and bearing equal share in divers faculties; but in military discipline and gravity of manner; Seneca in precepts of eloquence and courageous demeanor; assisting each other in their charge, the more effectually to restrain the impetuosity of youth with honest and lawful directions, whenever virtue should be his native power and authority. Their care was equally employed also in curbing the fierce and violent temper of Agrippina, who boiling with the ambitious desires of rule and dominion, had destroyed Silenus, praetor of Asia, and Narcissus, the former without the Emperor's knowledge, and the latter without his consent. But her haughty and imperious carriage began to no longer please the Emperor, and he was now at least so far as to hate her exorbitant power and authority; and to her he showed his first resentment; though she had given him not only birth but dominion also, for which she had sacrificed both her conscience and honor. The first occasion was his falling in love with Aote, a mean and unfranchised woman, which raised great jealousy in Agrippina, who dreading the extravagant power of a concubine, used all methods to prevent the effects of his growing passion; but Nero by the assistance of Otho and Claudius Phoenicia, two persons lately advanced in his favor, found means to obtain his lovely Aote; which opened a passage to many other remarkable accidents that followed, wherein he manifested his hatred and disobedience to his mother, who till now had a transcendent power over him, as well as others.

Agrippina finding the disposition of her son, attempted by all possible methods to recover his favor, sometimes by authoritative counsels and instructions, and other times by servile entreaties and flatteries; till Nero shortly after displacing her chief favorite Pallas, she fell into the extremest rage imaginable; and the more to terrify him, told him, that Britannicus, a true and worthy prince, was now in a condition to recover his father's empire, which at present was possessed by an impostor; threatening to go to the camp, and lay open the villainous practices of her unfortunate family, invoking likewise all the infernal furies to her assistance. These furious menaces put Nero in great fear of a competitor, if not the loss of his Empire; and to free himself from all jealousies, he appointed a poison for Britannicus, which was given him with the greatest secrecy, but had not its intended effect. Whereupon Nero had recourse to a second plan much stronger than the former; which was dexterously administered to this young Prince in a public banquet, and so suddenly spread through his veins, that at once his speech and spirits forsook him. The spectators were all amazed and Agrippina and Octavia in a great fright and confusion; but Nero leaving unconcernedly upon the table, assuring the company, "That it was usual for him to be seized with such epileptic fits, so they need not doubt his recovery;" the rest, for different ends and purposes, dissembled their griefs, composed their countenances, and after some silence the mirth of the banquet began again. Britannicus was privately buried that same night, his mean funeral being paid secretly by Agrippina, though almost in a deplorable condition, still contented with her son, entertaining the tribunes and centurions with all courtesy, and honoring the names and virtues of the nobility in town, as though she had sought for a head to raise a faction. Whereupon Nero laying aside all honor and respect, commanded her guard of Germans to be taken from her, and herself to be lodged out of the Palace, forbidding particular persons to visit her; and to himself very often to see her, and then with great coldness and small esteem shown to her, either in respect of nature or quality; and being thus in disgrace, as it is usual after such misfortunes, most of her friends abandoned her; and shortly after Julia Silana, wife to the famous Silenus, falsely accused her of conspiring against her son, and that she was about marrying to Rubellius Plautius, a person descended from Augustus by his mother, and making him Emperor. This brought Agrippina into great danger, till the accusation was discovered to be all forgery and falsehood, and Julia banished: Which slight punishment gave encouragement to a mercenary fellow, called Pallas, to accuse Pallas and Burrhus of endeavoring to depose Nero, and to set up Cornelius Sylla for Emperor; but his accusations appearing to have no foundation, he and his accomplices were banished. All this passed

In the second year of Nero's reign, in the latter end of which year, or two years after, St. Paul was brought prisoner to Rome, by the command of Festus, governor of Judea, who succeeded Felix, brother of Claudius, who had been sent thither by Claudius.

As Nero increased in years, so his vices and extravagancies became more conspicuous; and now directing himself of his majesty and quality, he frequently ran about the city by night, disguised in the habit of a slave, entering taverns and infamous houses, with some low companions, burling persons, and committing many insolencies in the streets, sometimes to the anger of his own life. And as the follies and vices of Princes, though condemned in their absence, are generally excused, and often applauded in their presence; so Nero's favorites endeavored not to withdraw him from these extravagancies, but only advised him to take care of his person, and not to go without a guard; by which means they were the occasion of far greater riots and disorders than before. And from these practices of the Emperor, great numbers of profligate young persons took occasion to do the like; so that infinite violences were committed by him and them, which raised so small tumults and disturbances in the city; though in other matters good order was still observed, and justice regularly administered; and the people bore the mischiefs and levities of the young Emperor with greater patience, by reason of his beautiful disposition, and his exceeding civility and friendship, and his sports and exercises he permitted any to be present; so that it seemed as if Heaven had sent the Romans such a Prince as they desired; and his five years' government was so excellent, in general, that the famous Emperor Trajan afterwards said, "That for that space all governments came short of his. But a great part of this is to be attributed to the wise conduct of his son and Seneca, which two were this young Emperor's guides and governors, in equal authority, and bearing equal share in divers faculties; but in military discipline and gravity of manner; Seneca in precepts of eloquence and courageous demeanor; assisting each other in their charge, the more effectually to restrain the impetuosity of youth with honest and lawful directions, whenever virtue should be his native power and authority. Their care was equally employed also in curbing the fierce and violent temper of Agrippina, who boiling with the ambitious desires of rule and dominion, had destroyed Silenus, praetor of Asia, and Narcissus, the former without the Emperor's knowledge, and the latter without his consent. But her haughty and imperious carriage began to no longer please the Emperor, and he was now at least so far as to hate her exorbitant power and authority; and to her he showed his first resentment; though she had given him not only birth but dominion also, for which she had sacrificed both her conscience and honor. The first occasion was his falling in love with Aote, a mean and unfranchised woman, which raised great jealousy in Agrippina, who dreading the extravagant power of a concubine, used all methods to prevent the effects of his growing passion; but Nero by the assistance of Otho and Claudius Phoenicia, two persons lately advanced in his favor, found means to obtain his lovely Aote; which opened a passage to many other remarkable accidents that followed, wherein he manifested his hatred and disobedience to his mother, who till now had a transcendent power over him, as well as others.

Agrippina finding the disposition of her son, attempted by all possible methods to recover his favor, sometimes by authoritative counsels and instructions, and other times by servile entreaties and flatteries; till Nero shortly after displacing her chief favorite Pallas, she fell into the extremest rage imaginable; and the more to terrify him, told him, that Britannicus, a true and worthy prince, was now in a condition to recover his father's empire, which at present was possessed by an impostor; threatening to go to the camp, and lay open the villainous practices of her unfortunate family, invoking likewise all the infernal furies to her assistance. These furious menaces put Nero in great fear of a competitor, if not the loss of his Empire; and to free himself from all jealousies, he appointed a poison for Britannicus, which was given him with the greatest secrecy, but had not its intended effect. Whereupon Nero had recourse to a second plan much stronger than the former; which was dexterously administered to this young Prince in a public banquet, and so suddenly spread through his veins, that at once his speech and spirits forsook him. The spectators were all amazed and Agrippina and Octavia in a great fright and confusion; but Nero leaving unconcernedly upon the table, assuring the company, "That it was usual for him to be seized with such epileptic fits, so they need not doubt his recovery;" the rest, for different ends and purposes, dissembled their griefs, composed their countenances, and after some silence the mirth of the banquet began again. Britannicus was privately buried that same night, his mean funeral being paid secretly by Agrippina, though almost in a deplorable condition, still contented with her son, entertaining the tribunes and centurions with all courtesy, and honoring the names and virtues of the nobility in town, as though she had sought for a head to raise a faction. Whereupon Nero laying aside all honor and respect, commanded her guard of Germans to be taken from her, and herself to be lodged out of the Palace, forbidding particular persons to visit her; and to himself very often to see her, and then with great coldness and small esteem shown to her, either in respect of nature or quality; and being thus in disgrace, as it is usual after such misfortunes, most of her friends abandoned her; and shortly after Julia Silana, wife to the famous Silenus, falsely accused her of conspiring against her son, and that she was about marrying to Rubellius Plautius, a person descended

Weather-Crop Bulletin.
BOSTON, June 23.—The weather-forecast of New England says: The past week in New England has been one of unusual heat, an excess of sunshine, and a lack of rainfall over the greater part of New England. Crops are doing well, although more rain is needed in many places, and especially in central New Hampshire. There the grass crop will be very light unless more rain falls soon. Old fields are especially poor, not only in this section, but in many places in Vermont, and also in Massachusetts, both on the coast and in the Connecticut valley. Reports from the Connecticut valley indicate that it is too dry for setting tobacco to good advantage. Some trans planting has been done.

Charged With Forgery.
PROVIDENCE, June 20.—Charles E. Conley, 18 years of age, was arrested early yesterday morning for forgery. He had been engaged as elevator boy at the Swartz building for two weeks, and stole the mail left with him for the occupants of the offices in that building. In one was a note, due to W. J. Gannett, for $17.50. He went to E. J. Gannett, the maker of the note, and represented that he had been sent with authority to collect it. He gave the name of J. Halsey DeWolf, a well known bank director, and secured the money. A few minutes later Phineas met Gannett and informed him of the payment of the note. This led to an investigation and Conley's arrest at his mother's house.
